Meredith Andrews

Bermudian artist, portrait and documentary photographer, Meredith Andrews lives and works on the island where most of her work revolves around portrait photography and storytelling. Her portraits are often part of a collection of images that attempt to celebrate “everyday people” and the often-overlooked aspects of our island’s society and culture. Attempting to look beyond the obvious physical beauty and postcard image of Bermuda.

Her portrait work has been exhibited widely, including London’s National Portrait Gallery, Arles Photo Festival, the International Center for Photography in NYC, The Photographer’s Gallery in London and the Bermuda National Gallery.

In recent years she has turned her attention to Bermuda’s delicate natural environment and the global problem of plastics in our oceans. Meredith collects discarded ocean plastic from Bermuda’s shorelines, organizes the waste by shape, color or item to create photographic and sculptural works that highlight this pertinent issue.
